My dear Madame Grieg.

Will you think it presumptuous in me if I write to you. You have been so very much in my mind & heart lately that I must express some of my feelings to you. You are so sympathetic & eternally youthful that I am sure you find it easy to understand young people like ourselves & myself. We are both so very thankful that we have known you for such a little time. Nothing can ever take away from me though the lesson of love & beauty of outlook that you carry about with you in your life.

We, young lovers, never such a life as yours, devoted as it is to the memory of your great love. It will always be a story of the tenderest romance for our children, that we grew up story of Edward Grieg & his dear dear wife. We are both very young but we love very deeply & have hosts of ideals that we hope to realize in the future & you help us to do it. Your friendship is a very precious encouraging reality to possess.

We both thank you heartily & sincerely & lovingly for your kindness to us. Edith said to me when we left you on Sunday, spontaneously & earnestly "Oh!
Gibson! I love her already. Think & I have only known her for one little afternoon in my life."

It will give me such pleasure if you will allow me to write to you occasionally.
Do please let me tell you something how we two are progressing with our ideals. Then perhaps when we are married next year we may see you again if you are in England or if we come to Norway.

Edith is going to try to see you for a moment on St Saturday at the Concert.

I do hope that both you & your dear sister are well & very happy. It has been a truly wonderful pleasure to meet you both again.

Please accept my sincerest greetings & good wishes

Yours very sincerely

E. Gibon-Young
